BEHIND THE SCENES IN Washington

Distillers Are "The Dog" in First Trial of Fair Profits... Hastings Reserves the Right to Squawk... Everybody's Out of Step Except Terrell... No New Party for F. R.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER

NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—When you're a little timid about experimenting with a major policy, first you try it out on the dog.

That's the way the administration is working in its admitted plan toward redistribution of income through discouragement of unfair profits.

The distillers aren't very popular and their business is such as to call for close supervision. The consuming public has been hollering louder at their price list than at any other.

So the distilling industry will be the first to have its private books studied, in an effort to determine its costs and profits.

That's the sort of thing the "young liberals" in the administration have been aiming for. Roosevelt himself has insisted that the return on capital must be smaller, to maintain adequate purchasing power.

Nearly all AAA marketing agreements have carried provisions enabling the government to inspect books of processors, although there's only one approved NRA code of that type so far—the fertilizer code.

But the administration has proceeded cautiously and, except for a few individual milk companies, the distillers will have the distinction of being the first patient to go on this New Deal operating table.

The FACA, which is about to perform the operation, hasn't any power to re-set prices. But it can provide a lot of publicity.

He'll Still Squawk
Senator Dan Hastings of Delaware was roundly denouncing the $350,000, 000 civil-works relief bill as a "pork barrel" for the states. Well, demanded McKeller of Tennessee—who was in charge of the bill—how was he going to vote for it?

"Oh, well," answered Hastings, "I may vote for it. But I shall not stop criticizing it."

Just One Man in Step

Merrell's limelight for the first time beats on Congressman George B. Terrell of Texas. The House voted 382 to 1 for the civil-works-relief bill, which also carried $235,000,000 for farmers, and the gent on the short end turned out to be Mr. Terrell.

The Texan shouted that "the others can go through on these things like dumb driven cattle if they want to, but I don't intend to."

Terrell is a 71-year-old farmer, bald, gray, slightly stooped. This is his first term. He lives on a farm in East Texas and works on it when he's there. He was a legislator and state agriculture commissioner in Texas and beat his Republican opponent for congressman-at-large in 1932—798,647 votes to 69,905.

He's strong for state rights and dead against all this "government interference in private business."

Mayer E. P. Palmer of Alto, Texas, wired Roosevelt that Terrell "is not representing his home town in fighting the administration."

But Terrell says he has had about 50 letters and telegrams about it all pitting him on the back. He says he wouldn't care if they all denounced him.

No New Party for F. R.
Roosevelt's friends are letting it be known that he has no thought of a new liberal party which would scrap the Democratic label and present Democratic machinery. He wants to maintain his old party as the liberal party and attract as many independent and progressives into it as he can—both by principles and patronage.

And he expects to lose some of the Democratic conservatives in the process.

But he will work under the Democratic label and with present Democratic political leaders as long as they pay ball with the New Deal.

Use Pumice Stone to Remove Foot Calluses

Feet have a definite relation to health and beauty. They should be given as good care as your hands, arms, face or any other part of your body.

Scrub your feet each day with a brush and plenty of soap suds. Then

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton

Don't Scold Too Severely—Reprimands May Affect Small Child Mentality

A correspondent writes, "What do you do when you have two children, one four-years old and one two? You can't stand with your hands on your hips and yell 'Shut up' all day."

No, Madam, you can't. You can, I should say, but it's about as worth while as asking the wind to stop blowing. They wouldn't know how. The four-year-old might, for a few minutes, but as you know, he forgets almost instantly.

Of course, you can make them afraid, and stop development. That's easy. It has been the indoor sport of parents for centuries to make little children afraid.

But by this time every one should know that such a course makes them cross, stupid and unhappy if it is kept up long enough. You realize this or you would not have written. I congratulate you on your good sense and intelligence.

Nature Plays Part

Your two-year-old is developing her body and her instincts. She is learning co-ordination of mind and muscle, deepening her impressions by being active. Lady Nature is training her own child by little noise-making experiments, great movement of body and a magnificent curiosity.

The four-year-old is the greater problem. Children are born three times. At birth, again in the 4th, 5th year period, and again during adolescence. In each of the last two phases there is a complete readjustment of social attitude, that is, the point of view toward the world.

It is quite easy to set the attitude of the four-year-old against people. His reactions will be according to his nature. He may retire into himself if constantly scolded, and become a shy, shamed little shadow, remaining such all his life—futile, cowardly, and beaten before he starts. Or he may turn into a little spirit-craving, by turning into a little spirit-craving, but only unconscious resentment may not turn on his mother but on every one else around him. Or he may fight openly and grankly any one who tries to control.

Reprimand Discreetly

During this period of social adjustment, he is developing personality. Everything he sees or does, every experience he has he interprets in terms of "self" or as it is called "ego," a most important emotion-center of the mind. He can be made or broken by his treatment. It is now that he will develop an incurable "inferiority" if entirely discouraged.

This does not mean that he can always have his own way, but reprimand should be of the sort not to leave permanent mental scars, and too much punishing and scolding will do this very thing.

Keep both children busy. The old child particularly needs to have diversified toys that provide activity. Keep his hours as regular as the baby's. Don't interpret everything as naughtiness. The "will" is a definite part of social development and asserts itself. Don't argue. Give in sometimes and don't sometimes, but don't argue. He won't always obey, particularly a positive command—the "do" command.

Times passes. Gradually both will be quieter as reason and other things tone them down. Be as cheerful as you can and accept the inevitable. Little children will be noisy, disobedient and thoughtless a great deal of the time.

dry them with a coarse towel, being particularly careful to remove all moisture between the toes. If you have a box of antiseptic foot powder, dust between your toes with it.

Then, twice a week, manœuvre your toes and treat calluses and other foot disorders. A piece of pumice is invaluable for removing small calluses on heels and bottoms of feet. If you have a corn or a bunion, see a foot doctor and have him treat it.

Begin your pedicure by massaging each foot with a rich, nourishing cream. Rub the cream on your palms and then, starting at the toes rub upward to the ankles.

When you have finished, wipe off the surplus cream and begin to manœuvre toes and toe nails.

That Yard Garden of Yours—No. 6

Put Annuals in Circular Rows, So Stripped Parts Won't Show

The new way of laying out a garden.

This is the sixth of a series of articles by Donald Gray, famous landscape consultant, on how to make a beautiful garden of your back yard.

By DONALD GRAY
NEA Service Landscape Consultant

The dream of every gardener is to be able to cut flowers by the armful without spoiling the effect of the outdoor living room garden.

This cannot be achieved unless a plot of ground is set aside for the growing of plants in rows where cultivation can be done easily. It has to be a garden area by itself, and yet it may not be a disagreeable sight if it is properly planned.

Usually beds of varying sizes are made and they are hard to cultivate. In fact they can be taken care of only by a hoe.

If the flowers are planted in straight rows, as much dirt will be seen as blooms. When one row of plants has ceased blooming, then there is a row all across the garden that becomes void and an eyesore.

A pleasing, and practical, scheme for growing annuals to cut has been patterned after an idea a civic engineer had for economy of space and labor and also for appearance. He enjoys growing flowers of all kinds and lots of them, but he does all the work himself and he has to use a hand cultivator to grow good plants in quantity.

This means that plants must be grown in rows, but they do not need straight or at right angles to the main path. By laying out the rows carefully before planting, it is an easy matter to keep them in curves as shown in the accompanying sketch.

After the ground has been spaded, or plowed and raked, the center path first is staked out. With string tied to a stake set in the center of the path, mark off a circular line. Vary the distance between rows depending on the need of the flower that you expected to plant.

Measure off this distance and move the stake down the path. In this way every row has the same curve and no matter how much one row varies from another.

The value of the curved rows is that, walking through the garden, you cannot see the dirt between the rows. The garden appears filled with flowers.

High growing plants are placed at the end and each succeeding row is lower.

AN EDITORIAL BY BRUCE CATTON

The streets of Paris, most beautiful and romantic to look at in all of Europe, are the home of a mob—a mob whose tradition goes back for centuries, a mob which has changed dynasties, altered the destinies of nations and changed the course of world history.

This mob dates 'way back to the middle ages, when factions of rival claimants to royal power scuffled and fought along the muddy alleys by the Seine. It has been repressed over and over again, so that people have forgotten it, and a visitor to "the most civilized city in the world" never dreams of its existence. But it is always there, dark below the surface, ready to break loose when its hour comes.

A little thing can bring it up. In 1789 the French government was unable to balance its budget. Out of the ensuing deliberations came confusion, and in the confusion the tocsin was sounded; and the mob swept up from nowhere, to tear down the Bastille, turn a king's head in the dirt, turn raw democracy loose on a startled world, set off a ferment that is still working—and to subside, finally, only before Napoleon's famous whiff of grapeshot.

It rose again in 1930, and again in 1848, and again in 1871. It has fought with paving stones and pikes, with clubs and with rifles. It has ruled all of France and it has set Europe to shuddering. Because of it the guillotine has clanked and soldiers have killed one another in Spain and Italy and on the plains before Moscow. Forever repressed, it is forever arising anew.

In the broad Place de la Concorde, where the mob of 1834 battled the troops, Louis XVI lost his head—and Danton, and Marie Antoinette, and Charlotte Corday, and many another. And as the barricades went up the other day, and all of France rocked with turmoil, the spectre of the unaccountable once more loomed at Europe.

The mob of Paris was up again!

SOCIETY

Mrs. Sid Henry TELEPHONE 921

If it were not for little lights
Eet him above the plain
When darkness comes, I think that there
Would be no ease for pain.
If no white candle-anywhere-
Would give a tulip flame,
The grief, for beauty's sake alone
Could never have a name.
And if all firelight should cease,
And light no lifted face,
Each old loved room would be a bleak
Ungracious dwelling place;
And for dear Hearts-if suddenly-
One little easement's glow
Should fall for them-the light would die
In the whole world, we know.

Made Mate a Nut Sunde, Wife Says

Billed as "the most beautiful girl in Chicago," actress Mary Sunde, above, seemed all of that to Gerhard Sunde, according to a separate maintenance suit filed by Mrs. Anna Sunde. airlines a chance to get airmail).
3—Authorized the post office to give extensions to lines already holding contracts (this to protect the equity of contractors who had thousands of dollars tied up in equipment).
Spoils Are Split
It was under this law that it is charged Brown and the airmail operators carried on their abuses. By this time, you see, big money had come into the industry, and lines already were being drawn under the control of two or three big companies. And here is what happened:

"SPOILS CONFERENCE"—Brown called the operators in, and they sat down to divide up the new routes among themselves. But they didn't agree on what they wanted, so Brown took charge and built his own airmail "map."
EXTENSIONS—Congressmen say that it was their intention that extensions literally should be extensions, that is, small additions to routes already existing.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Stanford announced the arrival of a little son, Friday, February 16, at Julia Chester hospital.

BIG MONEY'S GRIP

of all the airmail mileage is flown by the "Big Three."

Brown Enters Picture
So the events upon which the cancellation was based have been taking place during the last five years, largely during the administration of former Postmaster General Walter Brown.

After Brown took office Congress passed the Waters bill, which:
1—Changed the method of pay for carrying the mail from a pound basis (so much a pound, regardless of distance) to a space-mileage basis (so much a mile for a fixed allotment of cargo space).
2—Provided that new routes should be awarded under competitive bidding (this to give non mail carrying

NEW LINES—Congress intended that non-mail carrying lines (of which there were many, clamoring for mail subsidies) should have a chance to bid on all new airmail routes.
But only two important new routes were let under Brown—the central and southern transcontinentals.

Many independents wanted to bid on these lines. But at the last minute the specifications were changed, requiring six months of night flying by the bidding line. Not an independent line in America could qualify.

Some companies already flying mail also wanted a chance at these two routes. But it was charged before the Senate committee, the operators were told that if they dared submit a bid they would lose the contracts they already had.

Awards Cut and Dried
When the bids were opened, there was only one bid on each line (except for a brave independent, whose bid was thrown out). Gossip had foretold that the routes would go to certain companies, and they did.

On the foregoing are based the charges of fraud and collusion, on which all contracts were canceled. And the case of the airmail operators wasn't helped any by revelations of gigantic salaries and bonuses paid to officers of companies receiving subsidies, and of vast riches run up in the stock market on shares of subsidy-collecting companies.

With that background, here are the two sides to the question of whether Roosevelt did right or wrong, first the arguments for complete cancellation:
There was a "spoils conference," at which the operators tried to divide the airmail map to suit themselves, and there was an "understanding" among operators that only certain ones would bid on those two transcontinentals.

Monopoly Is Effected
A monopoly on airmail has grown up, and outsiders have been left away from the trough.
On the strength of their government contracts, many companies have put out vast issues of stock and skyrocketed it into millions for the lucky holders.

The administration is said to feel that fraud has been shown clearly, and that every operator who attended the "spoils conference" was equally guilty.
Arguments against complete cancellation follow.
That many of the operators are guiltless in that they did not ask for or receive any extensions or new contracts under Brown's regime.

83 Schools Are Charging Tuition
9,009 Children Enabled to Attend School, But 3,813 Are Denied
LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—Tuition charges are keeping open 23 "free" schools in Arkansas this year.
The parents of 9,009 children are paying from $3 to $7.50 per pupil to insure that the current depression does not deprive them of efforts to advance along with the children in more fortunate communities where tax yields are greater.

The state department of education has completed a study of this situation, revealing that in 3 counties tuition or fee schools are being operated. While 9,009 children are shown to be receiving the benefits of these schools, Dr. Howard A. Dawson, statistician, says that 3,813 other children in those same communities are denied school this year because their parents are unable to pay tuition.

To the above figures must be added others, since a number of communities, including Pine Bluff, have gone on a tuition basis since the department gathered the figures.
Logan appears to be the hardest-hit county so far as school revenues are concerned, because it leads in tuition schools with six. There are 1,360 pupils in them, but 1,650 children in the six districts have been denied schooling through inability of their parents to pay.

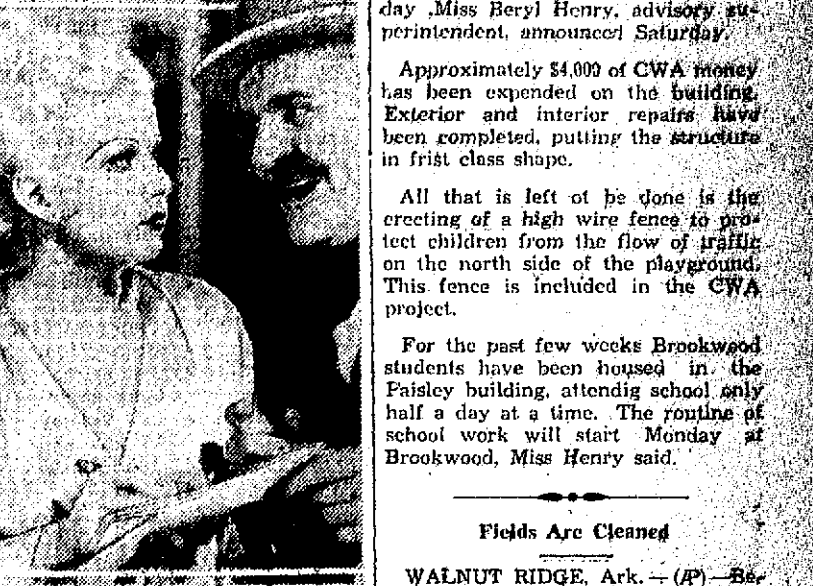

Computed on the present rates and the present enrollment of tuition pupils, $114,050 will be collected to operate these schools.

License Deadline Is Next Tuesday

Rates Same as Last Year Except for Small Per-Pound Charge
LITTLE ROCK.—(AP)—With the signing of the new bond refunding act by Governor Futrell, definitely fixing the motor vehicle license rates for 1934, Arkansas motorists decided to buy new tags with a rush.

As the trade news says, buying was "spotty" from January 1 until Governor Futrell fixed his signature to the bill. This resulted largely because the governor and revenue department officials had discouraged purchases until the refunding act was a certainty.

No check has been made on the number of licenses sold to date. Commissioner Earl Wiseman said, but only about 12,000 tags actually were distributed up to the time the measure became law.

Many automobiles and truck owners will not have to worry about the differences between the old and new rates. On automobiles, the difference the owner will be called upon to pay ranges from a few cents to $2 in some cases, particularly where weights have been increased. Trailer owners will bear the brunt of the increase.

There is more incentive today for young men and women to take business training than there has been since the World War. The NRA, ERA, CWA, etc., created thousands of new positions. These places practically absorbed the available supply of qualified people. Under our Great President, business is certain to improve. Why not start means thousands of additional positions to be filled. Why not start to school at once, so as to be ready a few months hence to take one of these places? There will never be a better time. Day and Night School. Call phone, or write for full information.

Brookwood to Be Occupied Monday

$4,000 CWA Repair Job Completed Except for Traffic Fence

Brookwood school building, closed for the past few weeks undergoing CWA repair work, will open Monday, Miss Beryl Henry, advisory superintendent, announced Saturday.

Approximately $4,000 of CWA money has been expended on the building. Exterior and interior repairs have been completed, putting the structure in first class shape.

All that is left of the job is the erecting of a high wire fence to protect children from the flow of traffic on the north side of the playground. This fence is included in the CWA project.

For the past few weeks Brookwood students have been housed in the Paisley building, attending school only half a day at a time. The routine of school work will start Monday at Brookwood, Miss Henry said.

Fields Are Cleaned
WALNUT RIDGE, Ark.—(AP)—Beginning earlier than in many years farm work in this section has a good start. It is estimated that 50 per cent of the stalks have been cut, and most of the fields have been cleared of debris ready for plowing. Many gardeners have potatoes and onions planted.

I have lived in Hope for 24 years. I have worked hard. I have made a success of my own business. I believe the business of the City of Hope can be conducted on a business basis. If elected Alderman from Ward One I promise to do my part to help run the city on that basis.

I also pledge myself to work for lower water and light rates.

Your Health

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

You'll Need Doctor's Diagnosis For Symptoms of Colitis

If you or any other member of your family should happen to fall victim to an ailment that resembles dysentery, you will be very wise to obtain immediate medical attention. There is a distinct possibility that the trouble may not be dysentery, but the much more serious ulcerative colitis.

Ulcerative colitis is a condition affecting the bowels, and which, in some instances, resembles acute infections with dysentery, but which, because of certain special characteristics, represents a different type of infection from that of the dysentery bacillus, or the amebae which cause amebiasis. If you get ulcerative colitis, you probably will suffer first from indigestion, pain in the abdomen, loss of weight, and weakness, and have extremely loose actions of the bowels. The condition develops rapidly. On examination a severe inflammation is found at the lower part of the bowel.

Unfortunately, in many cases, patients either attempt to treat themselves for this disorder or else fail to have the condition studied with sufficient care to determine certainly its nature.

One of the first things many people do is to resort to repeated washings of the bowels by various methods. Such intestinal irrigations are likely to be of little, if any, avail and usually are harmful; often they increase the irritation and the frequency of action.

Much more important is rest of the tissues concerned. Rest may be brought about by changing the diet to cut down the amount of residue in the food.

If you are a victim, perhaps you should avoid feeding entirely for brief periods and let your body be nourished instead with foods of a nutritious character, to be given by your physician into the skin or even into the blood.

This, however, should not be long continued because the disease itself tends to deplete the body. As soon as possible, you should have foods that are rich in calories, minerals, and vitamins.

In some cases it becomes possible to localize certain germs associated with the disease and to prepare serums by injecting these germs into horses. Such serums seem to be useful in some cases.

These obviously are the cases with which the correct germs are isolated and in which the specific serum reaches the cause.

Because of the resemblance of chronic ulcerative conditions of the lower bowel to the various forms of dysentery that have been described, and also to other conditions of the bowel which are associated with bleeding and mucus discharges (for example, cancer), you should be certain to obtain a positive diagnosis at the earliest possible moment.
